Chinese New Year

Chinese New Year is an important traditional festival. This celebration is more than a thousand years old and it is associated with different myths and customs.

The date

The Chinese New Year festival lasts for 15 days. Every year the date changes and the exact date is calculated according to lunar and solar calendars. The coming Chinese New Year in 2019 is the fifth of February.

The celebrations

Celebrations traditionally run from New Year's Eve to the Lantern Festival on the 15th day of the first calendar month.

Before Chinese New Year it's time for preparations: people clean and tidy their houses, buy new clothes and have their hair cut to bring good luck for the new year. Everybody decorates the house with red lanterns, paintings, paper cuttings and other red objects to welcome the new year.

The New Year's Eve dinner is the most important dinner for the Chinese. People normally stay at home and have a family reunion dinner. Every region in China has its typical food: fish, dumplings, New Year cake... At midnight, people open the doors and windows in the house to let the old year leave and there are fireworks in every city.

During the following days, there are traditional performances on the streets, like Chinese acrobats and traditional lion and dragon dances. Families give their children little red envelopes with 'lucky money' inside.

Chinese New Year in Britain

Chinese communities around the world also celebrate the New Year. In central London there are modern and traditional performances with Chinese acrobats. The streets are decorated with lucky red lanterns and you can hear people saying 'San Nin Faai Lok' - Happy New Year!
